Sir, - In response to resolutions of the Senate passed March 20th and 21st instant, I submit the accompanying report of Messrs. Lybrock and E. T. D. Myers. Mr. Lybrock is known in this city as a thoroughly competent architect, whose services I engaged to make the examination required, who associated with him Major E. T. D. Myers, who is a thoroughly-educated, practical, and competent engineer and architect, and whose judgment in such matters is equal to, if not superior to, any other in this city.

Their report in reference to the walls and ceiling of the Senate chamber is respectfully submitted. Very respectfully, S. H. BOYKIN, Superintendent Public Buildings. RICHMOND, VA., March 24, 1879.

Public Buildings: Sir,-We, the undersigned, having at your instance examined the walls and the floor of the State Library room, which is immedistely over the Senate chamber, respectfully report our conclusions as to strength and

First. The walls, both of the Senate chamber and Library, are of unusual thickness, and are well-built of excellent materials. The wall adjacent to the portico is 32 bricks thick above the floor of the Library and 45 bricks thick below, and that adjacent to the rotunda is 4g bricks thick above and 7 bricks thick below the same floor. While we consider these dimensions ample, it is nevertheless true that the portico wall is somewhat out of plumb, the tendency being to bulge outward-a tendency which may be effectually checked by the introduction of tie-rods at the line of the Library floor extending from wall to wall-a precaution neither expensive nor disfiguring to the editice. Such rods have already been introduced on the opposite side of the Capitot building.

Second. The Library is 30 feet wide, and this space is supported by joists of the best southern pine, all heart, and connected with each other by several rows of the most substantial bridging. These joists are Inches wide, 18 inches deep, and placed at intervals of 201 inches between centres.

For the load which might be imposed upon this floor, which of course forms the ceiling of the Senate chamber, we have calculated on the following extreme conditions-viz. : All the cases or shelves packed with books weighing 34 pounds per cubic foot. weighing 70 pounds per square foot. A crowd upon the floor weighing, including the weight of the floor itself, 100 pounds per square foot. Under these conditions our calculations prove that the estimated strength of the not the form of the bill below is correct or floor is about five times the load, and of course that with the ordinary duty imposed upon it the floor is absolutely safe.

But it must be added that beams so long as these in question are comparatively deficient in stiffness; so that were the Library at any time packed with a crowd in the way we have assumed, a deflection of the floor sufficient to crack the plaster ceiling of the Senate chamber might ensue. Even then, however, as we have before stated, the floor itself would not be in danger. Such a test need never be made.

All of which is respectfully submitted. [Signed] ALB. LYBROCK, Architect. E. T. D. MYERS, C. E.

THE NEW FIRE-PROOF BUILDING. At half past 10 o'clock this morning the Senate will consider Mr. Quesenberry's bill to provide for a fire-proof building for the preservation of the public libraries, papers, and other property of the State. A lot of ground in the Capitol Square fronting on Twelfth street opposite to its intersection with Franklin street 90x130; $10,000 from the Treasury; the bricks in the old belfry or guard-house in the Square, and on the armory lot; and a sufficient quantity of granite from the State quarry, are appropriated by the bill, with the necessary conwiet labor from the penitentiary for the construction of the proposed building. The building will be of the Egyptian style of architecture, similar to the Medical College, and will front on Gavernot and Franklin streets, not far from the site of the old State court house. The building will contain a court-room, conference room, clerk's office, office for the Attorney-General, rooms for the law and miscellaneous libraries belonging to the State. and for the Southern Historical Society and the State Historical Society. The bill also provides for the sale of the present Courtof-Appeals building, &c., after the removal of the court, clerk's office, &c.

The old man is evidently an Engfishman, and is about six feet two inches high, and is nigh on to three-score-yearsand ten. At his side, with her right arm locked within his, stood his fair companion, who looked quite young as compared with bim, for she was only twenty-nine. They seemed exceedingly anxious to be divorced, yet were very affectionate towards each other when on the street. Armin-arm they went into the court-house and inquired for the Judge. On being introduced to his Honor, was asked by him to state their mission. They both began to relate the history of their past matrimonial life. The wife finally obtained the floor, and began at a very rapid rate to relate her Major S. H. Boykin, Superintendent of part of the programme, and it seemed to eave a deep impression upon the young single men present. After allowing his fair one a trial at oratory, the old gentleman took the floor, and very minutely explained his situation, and closing with a peroration kindled with zeal and emotion, earnestly requested the Judge (to use his own term) to unbitch them. His Honor informed them that he had no authority in such cases, but directed him in the course necessary to pursue. They then left the court-house, and, as directed, started on foot in the direction of the residence of the Judge of the Circuit Court (who resides in Petersburg).
